

Amnesty International opposes injustice

By Lucine Toomey

Four members of the Amnesty International Halifax branch were in Bridgewater on March 7 at the request of the social justice committee of St. Joseph's Roman Catholic Church.

Corrie Doumo, national co-ordinator of the Korean campaign. Davies Bagambiire, refugee co-ordinator; Heather Crosbie, Atlantic representative to the executive; and Bob Goodfellow met with people who were interested in Amnesty International to explain the movement to them.

Founded in 1961 in Britain, today Amnesty International has more than 200,000 members, subscribers and supporters in 151 countries throughout the world. Amnesty International's approach to injustice has been to promote the implementation of universal principles not only at the level of governments and international organizations, but through the concerted action of committed individuals working in small, local groups.

Through the network of members and supporters Amnesty

Continued on page 2

Amnesty International meeting

Pictured at the Amnesty International meeting that was held in Bridgewater on March 6 from left were: John MacDonald of Bridgewater, Corrie Doumo, Bob Goodfellow, Heather Crosbie, and Davies Bangambiire — all members of the Halifax branch of Amnesty International.